

Pushed by the other traffic you find yourself
going twenty miles over the speed limit through the endless human neglected landscape of rusted hulks and twisted concrete timbers, etc.
Then suddenly
a small patch of green flashes by
and the call of a bird
pierces
all of the madness.

Poetry
in the modern world.

July 2nd, '02
C. Mehrhoff